FIVE WITCHES BURNED IN MEXICO.

How much barbarism, superstition, and darkness still exist in the world is proven by the fact that five people have been recently burnt in Mexico as witches. St. James, a village in Coahuila, was the scene of this murder. Two individuals, a man and a woman, were first committed. As soon as the first was burnt, they gave notice of having something to reveal. The flames were then temporarily extinguished, and the poor wretched creature was first administered by the demoniacs three other individuals as their assistants. With as much speed as was convenient these five individuals were captured, the pile was lighted, and five victims instead of three were sacrificed to a form of superstition which, like some other forms, is "an unreasonable time in dying."
